1- California resident, Tara Hearn and her New York pen pal, Laura Potter, began their relationship 30 years ago through a letter, and on Jan. 28 of this year, they finally had the opportunity to meet face to face in Destin.

2- The first letter was written when the two were in the sixth grade. Tara was in California and Laura in New York. It was a school project, and the two were picked to be pen pals.

“We each received a postcard telling us who our pen pal was going to be,” Tara said. “It had each other’s name and address. Once we got the postcards, we both wrote first letters. The letters were mainly introductions, telling each other where we were from, what school we went to and what we liked to do in our spare time.”

Tara said it was interesting and exciting because they were each so different. Tara was from the west and Laura from the north. Tara was an only child, while Laura had a large family. She said they both had very different ideas of how each other’s lives actually were. As the years went by and the relationship grew, so did the writing.

3- “We talked about everything,” Tara said. “Things that you might be afraid to tell your best friend who sits next to you in class, you could tell your pen pal because she was a whole country away. It was like a best friend 3,000 miles away.”

The two continued writing through grade school, high school and even after that. As technology advanced, so did the medium by which they communicated. Tara said, they haven’t physically written a letter in years, but they now communicate through email and over social networks.

4- After 30 years of communication, the two friends finally met in Destin.

“When we saw each other for the first time,” Tara said. “We immediately ran to each other and hugged each other. It was like we were schoolgirls again. Finally meeting Laura was a dream which came true.”Tara encouraged any young person who wants to start writing a pen pal.

5- “Pen pals give you the opportunity, not only to learn another culture,” Tara said. “But, they also give you a friend who always has your side.”

“We have had our children together and raised them, and now we are talking about grandchildren and retirement together!
